All I Want is Just you

All I Want Is Just You
Written by Manohar
© 2024 Manohar

This book is shared with no copyright and no restrictions.
You are free to copy, share, quote, and distribute these words in any form — without permission, without limitation.

All I ask is something simple and human:
If these words touch your heart, remember who wrote them.

These are not just words.
They are pieces of silence, love, and longing — given freely, without expectation.

May they find a home in you, the way they once lived in me.

Printed by:
Sri Surya Sudha Offset Printers

For the Reader

If you're reading this,
and you love someone you can't have,
know this:
You're not weak.
You're not foolish.
You're not wasting your time.

You're human.
You're feeling.
You're alive.

And if all you want is just them...
then that's enough.
Hold on.
Let go.
Wait.
Write.
Cry.
Hope.

Because love, even unreturned,
is never wasted.

And to you, the girl who inspired this — thank you.
For being you.
For existing.
For being the reason my heart still believes.

All I ever wanted... was just you.

— A 22-year-old boy from India, who still believes in quiet love.

The Quiet Confession

I used to think love was something big — fireworks, travel, songs on the radio, holding hands in public, saying “I love you” under the stars.

Now I know.

Love is her voice on the phone when she’s tired.
It’s the way she says, “I’m busy,” but still replies after three hours.
It’s the way she notices when I skip dinner.
It’s the way she sends me a song at midnight like a secret message only I can decode.

I don’t want to impress the world.
I just want to matter to her.

And if that makes me weak, then let me be the weakest man alive.

Because all I want is just you.

I don’t need the world.
I don’t need fame, or money, or a thousand people saying they love me.

All I want is just you.

One smile. One “good morning.” One moment where you look at me and say, "I’m here. I see you. I choose you."

That’s all.

Not a relationship. Not a label. Not even a promise.

Just you.

Present. Real. Mine.

Even if it’s silent. Even if it’s small.

All I want is just you.

You don’t know how loud your silence is.
It echoes in my chest like a heartbeat that forgot how to stop.

Today I saw your name pop up on my phone.
Just a notification. No message. Just your name.

And for 10 seconds, I forgot how to breathe.

I stared at it like it was a miracle.
Like God finally said, “Fine. I’ll give you one second of peace.”

Then it disappeared.
You didn’t message.

But I still smiled.

Because for a second, I thought you were thinking of me.
And that’s enough.
It has to be.

People think love is loud.
That it needs songs, trips, public declarations, stories, rings.

But me?
I've learned that the loudest love is the one that says nothing.
The one that waits.
That texts "good morning" even when it knows it won't be replied to for hours.
That remembers how you take your tea.
That deletes its Instagram just so you won't see someone else's face.
That brings you food when you forget to eat.
That watches your stories 38 times a day and never comments.

That loves you... even when you don't love back.

And if that makes me weak, then let me be the weakest man alive.

Because all I want is just you.

I built a home in your silence, furnished it with memories you don't remember.
Now I live here alone—but I still call it ours.

I love you in ways
no one else sees.

I pray for you when you feel sad.
I celebrate when you're happy.
I cry when you're broken.

And you don't even know.

But that's okay.
Because all I want is just you.
Even if you never know how much.

You keep asking me,
"Why do you care so much?"

Do you not get it?

Because when I look at you, the noise in my head stops.

The world stops.

My fear stops.

You're the only pause button I've ever needed.

Hey,

I wrote this letter three times.
Deleted it twice.

Here's the third.

I don't want to change your mind.
I don't want to pressure you.
I don't even want a reply.

I just needed you to know—you're the reason I still believe in something.

In love. In patience. In waiting.

In the idea that maybe, one day, someone can love you so quietly,
so completely,
that you don't even notice it... until you miss it.

That's me.
I'm already missed.
Before I'm even gone.

— Me

I don’t want a thousand stars,
Just the one that flickers in your eyes when you’re tired.
I don’t want oceans,
Just the sound of your voice saying my name like it matters.

I don’t want cities,
Just the corner of the bus stop where we stood in silence once.
I don’t want fame,
Just the way you looked at me that one rainy evening — like I was enough.

All I want... is just you.
Not your time.
Not your promises.
Not even your love.

Just... you.
Breathing the same air.
Existing in the same world.
Even if we never speak again.

Because as long as you’re out there, my heart has a home.

They say love should be easy.
But what if loving you is the only thing that makes me feel alive?

I had every reason to call you mine.
I cared.
I stayed.
I showed up — again and again — even when you didn't ask.
I held you in my heart when no one else could see you.
I loved you in silence, without expecting anything back.

But none of it matters.
Because love isn't about reasons.
It's about return.
And when it's one-sided, all the reasons in the world can't make someone stay.

So I won't call you mine.
I'll just keep loving you —
in my heart, in my words,
in every breath I take.
Even if I never get to say it out loud.

You said,
"I don’t have any special feelings for you."
And I said,
"That’s okay. I have enough for both of us."
Because love isn’t about balance.
It’s about giving everything, even when you get nothing back.

I only have one life. And I want to live it with you.

Not just in days and nights. Not just in meetings and messages.
But in every poem I write.
In every thought I think. In every version of me — past, present, future.
Even the ones I haven't become yet.

I want to live with you in the silence between heartbeats.
In the space between "I miss you" and "I can't say it."
In the quiet moments when I'm alone and still feel you near me.

I want to live with you in every universe.
Even the ones where we don't meet.
Even the ones where you never love me back.
Because in every version of reality,
I still care. I still wait. I still write your name in the air when no one's watching.

I don't need a relationship.
I don't need a label.
I don't need promises.

I just need to live my life with you in it —
Even if it's only in my heart. Even if it's only in these pages.
Even if it's only like this.

Because all I want is just you. And if that's all I ever get — you in my soul, you in my silence, you in my story — then that's enough.

"Your Voice"
Your voice is my favourite sound.
Not because it's soft.
Not because it's sweet.

But because it's yours.
Even when you're angry.
Even when you're tired.
Even when you say, "Leave me alone."

I still want to hear it.

Because all I want is just you.
And your voice is the closest I'll ever get to heaven.

Sometimes I wonder—if I disappeared tomorrow, would you feel it?

Not in a dramatic way.
No tears. No posts.

Just… a small emptiness in your routine.
Like when your favourite song ends too soon.

That's all I want.
To be missed like a melody you never realised you loved.

Maybe someday I'll accept that she's not mine.
But I'll never accept that she's just another girl.

To me, she's gold.
Not something to hold. Not something to own.
But something to honor. To cherish. To carry in silence.

Even heaven would be jealous of how I see her — not for her beauty, but for her truth.
For her pain.
For the way she fights her battles alone.
For the way she speaks without words.
For the way she exists — like a quiet storm, like a memory I never lived, like a song that plays in my chest even when I'm trying to forget.

I don't love her because she loves me back.
I love her because she is.
And in a world full of noise, she's the only thing that makes me feel peace.

So no, she's not mine.
And maybe she never will be.

But in my heart?
She's not just a girl.
She's a universe.
And I'm just a boy who learned how to love by watching her from afar.

You said, “I don’t do relationships.”

I said, “I’m not asking for one.”

But what I didn’t say:
I’ll wait in the space between friendship and love.
Where hope lives.
Where I live.

And I’ll stay there.
As long as you let me breathe near you.

I may not be able to hold you in my arms right now...
but I hold you in my heart.
Every minute. Every day. Every breath.

Not in a dramatic way.
Not with grand promises. Just quietly.
Like I always have. Like I always will.

You don't know how heavy your silence is.
It sits in my chest like a truth I can't let go of.
But I don't want to let go.

Because even if you never come back, even if you never choose me, even if you forget my name —
I'll still carry you.
Not as my girlfriend. Not as my future.
But as the one person who made my heart feel alive without ever trying.

And that's enough. That's everything.

So yeah...
I may not be able to hold you.
But my heart never stopped.
It never will.

All I want is just you.
Even if it's only here.
Even if it's only like this.

You get angry a lot.
You snap.
You say things like, “Leave me alone.”
“You don’t understand me.”
“I’m tired of this.”

And I don’t argue.
I don’t reply.
I just… wait.

Because I know your anger isn’t really about me.
It’s about the world.
About the silence at home.
About the weight you carry alone.

So I let you be angry.
And when you’re done,
I say, “You okay?”
Not because I expect you to say yes.
But because someone should care.

Because all I want is just you.
Even your anger.

You don't owe me love.
But you owe me honesty.
So if you're keeping me around just because I'm easy to hurt, then please—walk away.

But if you keep me because I'm hard to forget, then stay.
Just stay.

They say distance makes the heart grow fonder.
But no one tells you how much it hurts.

How you memorise the time difference.
How you wait for a “seen” that never comes.
How you imagine her life — who she talks to,
who makes her laugh, who holds her when it rains.

Distance isn’t just miles.
It’s the silence between “I miss you” and “I can’t talk now.”
It’s the gap between “I care” and “I can’t show it.”
It’s loving someone who’s right there... but feels a lifetime away.

All I want is just you.
But even that feels like a dream too big to hold.

I don’t want to be your backup plan.
Your comfort.
Your “someone to talk to when no one else is around.”

But if that’s all I can be…
I’ll take it.

Because even second place with you feels like winning.

You never say “I love you.”
You never say “I miss you.”
You never say “Good morning” with hearts.

But sometimes, when I talk too much,
you say, “Hmmm.”
And sometimes, you say, “Hmmm okay.”

And I know — that’s your way of saying, “I’m listening.”
That’s your way of saying, “I’m still here.”
That’s your way of saying, “Don’t stop talking.”

And I hold that “hmmm” like a secret treasure.
Because all I want is just you.
Even your silence with a sound.

People ask me,
“Why do you keep writing about her?”
“She doesn’t love you back.”
“She doesn’t even reply.”
“Move on.”

But they don’t get it.
This isn’t about her.
It’s about me.
About the boy who feels too much.
Who loves in silence.
Who waits without knowing why.

I write because if I don’t,
I’ll drown in all the things I never said.
I write because love isn’t always returned — but it’s always real.
I write because one day, someone will read this and say,
“This is me.”
And they’ll feel less alone.

All I want is just you.
But if I can’t have you... let this book be my proof that I loved — deeply, quietly, completely.

And that’s enough.

I don’t need your love.
I need your presence.
Your voice at 2 a.m.
Your laugh in a crowded room.
Your silence that feels like home.

All I want is just you.
Not fixed. Not changed.
Just you.

You say “goodnight.”
Then silence.

No “sweet dreams.”
No “talk tomorrow.”
No emoji.

Just… gone.

And I stare at the screen.
I replay your last message.
I wonder if you’re asleep.
If you’re thinking of me.
If you felt anything when you typed that word.

And I realize — your silence after “goodnight” is the loudest thing I’ve ever heard.

Because all I want is just you.
Even your silence.

Why do I keep writing to you when you don't read?
Why do I keep hoping when you don't promise?

Because one day, you will.

One day, you'll open this book.
You'll read these pages.
And you'll realise—this wasn't obsession.

It was devotion.

And you were worth every word.

You told me,
"You expect too much."

But I don't.

I expect nothing.
No replies.
No dates.
No future.

I just expect you to exist in my world.
Even if I'm not in yours.

If it stays, it's love.
If it ends, it's a love story.
But if it never begins... it becomes a lifetime of silence.

A thousand words never spoken.
A million moments never lived.
Just a heart that loved without permission.
Without reply.
Without beginning.

And still...
it loved.
Quietly.
Completely.
Forever.

"Your Silence"
I used to fear your silence.
Now I love it.

Because in your silence,
I hear everything you can't say.
The pain.
The loneliness.
The hope.

And I sit with it.
Like a prayer.

Because all I want is just you.
Even your silence.

Today I passed by your college.
Didn't go in.
Just stood outside the gate.

Listened to the sound of students laughing.
Wondered if you were one of them.

Then I left.

Didn't even take a photo.

Because this moment wasn't for proof.
It was for me.

A reminder that you're real.
That you exist.
That I'm not just imagining you.

I don’t chase you.
I just stay.
Like gravity.
Like breath.
Like something you don’t notice until it’s gone.

I know I should move on.
But I choose to stay in the pain.
Because at least it still feels like you're here.
Let it break me a little every day —
I don't mind the ache.
It's the only thing I have left of you.
I don't want to heal yet.
Because forgetting you feels worse than hurting for you.

You said, “You’re too much.”
Too emotional.
Too intense.
Too attached.

And I didn’t argue.
Because maybe I am.

But let me tell you why.

Because when I love, I don’t do it halfway.
I don’t love you only when you reply.
I don’t love you only when you’re happy.
I don’t love you only when it’s easy.

I love you when you’re angry.
When you’re silent.
When you say things that cut.
When you block me.
When you forget my birthday.

I love you because you’re hard to love.
Not despite it.

Because all I want is just you.
Even if I’m “too much.”
Even if you can’t handle me.
Even if you never say it back.

— Me

You say you're not good at love.
That you don't know how to make someone happy.

But you already do.
Just by being you.

You don't have to try.
You don't have to change.

All I want is just you.
Even your flaws.
Especially your flaws.

Because they're real.
And you're real.
And that's more than enough.

Hey, 18-year-old me,

You're going to fall for someone who doesn't fall back.
You're going to wait.
You're going to cry.
You're going to write poems no one will read.

And one day, you'll wonder if it was worth it.

It is.

Because love isn't always about getting the person.
Sometimes, it's about becoming the kind of person who can love like this—deeply, silently, endlessly.

And that version of you?
He's worth it.

— 22-year-old you

You're not my dream.
You're my reality.
The one I wake up to.
The one I fall asleep thinking of.
The one who makes "ordinary" feel like magic.

You said, “You’ll regret loving me.”
Like I’m making a mistake.
Like one day I’ll look back and wish I left.

But let me tell you — even if I regret everything,
I’ll never regret loving you.

Because you taught me how to care.
How to wait.
How to love without asking for anything back.

Even if it hurts,
even if it ends in silence, even if I never get a reply —
I’d still choose to love you.

Because all I want is just you.
And that’s a choice I’ll never regret.

— Me

I don’t want to be in your life because I’m convenient.

I want to be in it because I’m necessary.

Not loud. Not demanding.
But essential.
Like air. Like light.
Like the quiet hum of a song you can’t forget.

I don’t care who had you first.
I don’t care who had you longest.

Because it’s not about who came before.
It’s about who stays — even when they’re not chosen.

And in my heart,
you look better with me.
Not because I say it.
But because I see you.
Really see you.

And if you ever let me,
I’ll take care of your heart like no one ever did.
Not with loud promises.
But with silence, patience, and truth.

Because love isn’t about winning.
It’s about being there.
And I’ll always be here.

You blocked me.
Then unblocked me.
Then ignored me.
Then texted me at 3 a.m.

I don't understand you.
And maybe I never will.

But I don't need to.
I just need to be near you.

Even if it's confusing.
Even if it hurts.

Because the pain of losing you is worse than the pain of hoping for you.

No matter what,
I'll always be here — not in your life, but in your corner.

Cheering for you.
Believing in you.
Holding hope for you when you can't hold it for yourself.

I won't ask for anything in return.
Not your love.
Not your time.
Not even your reply.

Just the quiet peace of knowing
I still care.
Even now.
Even like this.
Even if you never know.

You come and go like seasons.
But I'm still here—
a tree that never stops waiting for spring.

I don’t want your time.
I don’t want your promises.
I don’t want your “good morning” texts or your late-night voice notes.

I want the version of you that exists when no one’s watching.
The one who sighs when the rain starts.
The one who forgets to eat when she’s sad.
The one who still has my number even though she never uses it.

I want the silence between your “okay” and “bye.”
I want the way you used to say my name like it wasn’t heavy.
Like it belonged.

All I want is just you.
Not fixed.
Not returned.
Just… you.
Breathing.
Existing.
Even if I’m not in the story.

Because as long as you’re real,
I can keep loving you without needing you to know.

You said,
"I don’t want to hurt you."

But you already did.
By making me love you without letting me have you.

But I don’t blame you.
Love isn’t a crime.
And neither is hope.

Do you know what it's like to love someone who doesn't know how to stay?

It's like holding water in your hands.
The tighter you grip, the more it slips.
The looser you hold, the more you lose.

All I can do is keep my hands open.
And hope you choose to stay.

If it was just about looks,
it could've been anyone.
The world is full of pretty faces.

But it wasn't.
It was your soul I fell for.
Your silence.
Your pain.
The way you fight alone.

That's why it's only your heart
I'm chasing.
Not your body.
Not your reply.
Just the chance to stand near you
and say,
"I see you."

Even if you never see me.

One-sided love is quiet…
until it eats you alive.
Until every “good morning” feels like a prayer.
Until every unanswered message feels like a knife.
Until you realise — you’re not waiting for her to love you.
You’re just afraid of what your life looks like without her in it.

You once asked me, "Why do you love me?"

If I could answer, it wouldn't be love. It would be logic.
A list of reasons. A formula. An explanation.
But what I feel for you defies reason itself.

I don't love you because you reply.
I don't love you because you care.
I don't love you because you chose me.

I love you because when you say my name,
my chest feels heavy.
Because when your name lights up my phone,
I forget how to breathe.
Because when I think of you, the noise in my head stops.

I love you in the way the moon loves the night — not because it has to,
but because it can't imagine existing without it.

I can't explain it. I won't try.
Because love isn't something to be understood.
It's something to be felt.
Even when it hurts. Even when it makes no sense.
Even when it's one-sided.

So no, I can't tell you why I love you.
All I can say is —
I do.
Completely.
Quietly.
Forever.

I don’t want your love.
I want your truth.
If you can’t love me,
just don’t pretend you could.
If you can’t stay,
just don’t act like you won’t leave.

But if you do—if you stay—
I’ll spend my life making sure you never regret it.

I will spend my whole life trying to give you the love you should've always received.

Not because you asked for it.
But because you needed it.
Because no one else saw the cracks in your silence.
Because no one stayed when you pushed them away.

So I'll love you slowly.
Quietly.
Without asking for anything back.
Not to fix you.
But to show you what it feels like to be cherished — just as you are.

You don’t have to love me.
You don’t have to reply.
You don’t have to stay.

But please—don’t make me stop loving you.

Because that’s the only thing that keeps me going.

Hey,
I'm writing this not to make you feel guilty.
Not to make you reply. Not to make you stay.
I'm writing because my heart is too full, and if I don't let it out, I'll drown in it.
You don't owe me love. You don't owe me time.
You don't owe me explanations.
But I owe you the honesty.

So here it is:
I miss you. Even when you're angry.
Even when you're silent. Even when you say things that cut.

I miss the way you say my name when you're annoyed.
I miss the way you send reels at 1 AM like you're testing if I'm awake.
I miss how you remember the little things — like how I hate cold drinks, or how I sleep late.

I don't need you to love me back. I don't need you to call me "yours." I don't need labels.

I just need you. As you are.
With all your walls, your silence, your mood swings, your pain.

Because I see you. And all I want is just you.
No more. No less.

— Me

You're not a chapter in my life.
You're the whole book.
Even when the pages are blank,
I'm still reading you.

I want you...
not for fun.
Not to hurt you.
Not to use you.

But to make you feel happy — even on your darkest days.
To make you feel loved — even when you don't believe it.
To make you feel valued — not for what you do, but for who you are.
To make you feel secure — so you never have to hide.
To make you feel supported — even when the world turns away.
To make you feel appreciated — for every silence, every struggle, every strength.

Not for a day.
Not for a moment.
But forever.

I don't want you to be mine.
I just want you to be safe — in my words, in my care, in my heart.

Because all I want is just you.
And if I can give you peace, even once,
then everything I've felt was worth it.

I know you don't want a relationship.
I know you're scared.
I know you've been hurt.

But I'm not asking for anything.
I'm just... here.

Like a shadow.
Like a memory.
Like a song that plays in your head when you're trying to sleep.

I'm not going anywhere.
Not because I'm stubborn.
Because you're worth it.

You sent me a reel at 2 AM.
A song.
A meme.
A dance.
I don't even remember.

But I know one thing — you were awake.
And for one second,
you thought of me.

You didn't say, "I can't sleep."
You didn't say, "I miss you."
You just sent a reel.

But I saved it.
And I played it 17 times.
And I smiled like an idiot.

Because all I want is just you.
Even your random messages.

You asked me,
"Why don’t you move on?"

Because moving on means forgetting.
And I don’t want to forget you.

Not your voice.
Not your laugh.
Not the way you say my name.

Even if I never get you,
I want to remember you.

So no, I won’t move on.
I’ll stay right here.
In the space between almost and always.

I don’t need you to love me.
I just need you to know—you’re the only one I’ve ever wanted to be loved by.

Today I saw a girl in a blue hoodie at the bus stop.
She didn't look like you.
But she laughed — soft, sudden, like she forgot she could.
And for a second, my chest cracked open.

I wanted to run to you.
Not to tell you.
Just to say: "You're not the only one who laughs like that."
But you already know.
And I already know you don't care.

So I stayed.
Sat on the bench.
Watched the rain wash the city clean.
And thought: "If I could trade every dream I've ever had for one real conversation with you, I'd do it in a heartbeat."

But I won't.
Because even this — this pain, this silence, this wanting — is still love.
And I don't want to live in a world where I stopped loving you.

You say you're not good enough.
But you don't get it.

You're not not enough.
You're too much.
Too real.
Too deep.
Too powerful.

And I'm not afraid of that.
I'm in love with it.

You sent a voice note.
Just five seconds.
“Hey, did you eat?”

I played it 27 times.
Not because I didn’t hear it.
But because I wanted to hear your voice again.
And again.
And again.

I even listened to it while sleeping.
With earphones.
On loop.

My mom asked, “Who’s that?”
I said, “No one.”
But it was you.
And you were everything.

Because all I want is just you.
Even your voice notes.

One day, you'll read this book.
You'll see how much I loved you.
And you'll wonder—Why him? Why me? Why like this?

And I'll never tell you.
Because some things should stay unspoken.
Like the way my heart beats when your name lights up my phone.

You're not my dream girl.
You're my real girl.
The one with scars,
with silence,
with storms.
And I love you not despite them—because of them.

Today I deleted Instagram again.
Then recreated it.
Just to see your profile.

I didn't message.
I didn't like anything.

I just... looked.

Like a thief stealing a moment
I wasn't meant to have.

But I don't care.
Even a glimpse of you is a victory.

All I want is just you.
Not your attention.
Not your time.
Not your love.

Just you.

Your presence.
Your truth.
Your realness.

Even if it breaks me.

Hey,

I didn't write this to make you feel anything.
Not guilt. Not pity. Not even a flicker of "maybe."

I wrote it because last night,
I dreamt you called me.
Not for help. Not because you were sad.
Just to say: "Hey. I saw the moon. It's nice tonight."

And when I woke up,
I checked my phone.
No messages. No missed calls.
But my heart was still warm.

That's the thing about loving someone like you — you don't need to be here for me to feel you.
You're in the quiet.
In the pause.
In the way I still save songs I think you'd like, even though I'll never send them.

So no, I'm not okay.
But I'm not broken either.
I'm just... waiting.
Not for you to come back.
But for my heart to stop treating you like home.

— Me

You asked me once,
"Why don't you just leave?"

I didn't answer.

But here it is:

Because every time I try to walk away,
I remember the way you laughed that one time — not loud, but soft, like you forgot you were sad for a second.

Because you once said,
"You're the only one who doesn't treat me like I'm broken."
And I've held that sentence in my heart like a sacred promise.

Because even when you push me away, you still let me stay.

So no, I won't leave.

Not because I'm desperate. But because I choose you.
Every day. Even when it hurts.

All I want is just you.
And I'll wait — not with hope, but with patience.
Not with expectation, but with love.

— Always

You don’t have to stay forever.
Just stay long enough to make me believe that love like this exists.

You say you're not ready.
I say I'm not in a hurry.

You say you don't know what you want.
I say I do.

And what I want is you.

Even if you don't want me back.
Even if you never will.

All I want is just you.

I promise to love you even when you feel unlovable.

To lift you when you fall, and cheer for you in every failure.

To stand with you in the kitchen, no music, no words — just us.

To be myself, and love you exactly as you are — angry, silent, broken, real.

To look across the room, just to make sure you're okay.

To never stop learning you.
To keep falling in love with who you are,
and who you become.

To choose you — every day, again and again.

To never let our spark fade, and to always do the little things that make you smile.

And no matter what happens,
I promise to hold you in my heart — forever.

As long as I live,
you'll never truly be gone.

Love is not about winning or losing.
It's not a game.
It's not something you earn or lose.

It's a quiet choice.
To care.
To wait.
To stay — even when you're told, "I don't have any special feelings for you."
Even when you're treated like an option.
Even when she says, "Good, then just die."

And still...
you don't leave.

Because true love isn't about getting her.
It's about being there — in the silence, in the distance,
in the space between almost and always.

You don't wait because you think she'll come back.
You wait because you can't stop.
Because loving her isn't a decision.
It's your breath.
Your rhythm.
Your truth.

I wrote a poem today.
Tore it up.
Rewrote it.
Sent it.
You didn't reply.

I wrote another.
Didn't send it.

Sometimes, the most beautiful words are the ones meant to be felt, not read.

People say, “Bro, she doesn’t love you.
She doesn’t reply.
She doesn’t care.
Why are you still here?”

I don’t answer.

Because they don’t get it.

I’m not here for replies.
I’m not here for love.
I’m not here for promises.

I’m here because…
I choose to be.

Because when she’s sad, I want to be the one she calls.
When she’s angry, I want to be the one she yells at.
When she’s lonely, I want to be the one she thinks of.

Not because I want something.
But because I care.

And all I want is just you.
Even if you never choose me back.

I don’t want to be your escape.
I want to be your home.
Where you come back to when the world gets loud.
Where you’re safe.
Where you’re loved.
Even in silence.

He sent her a text at 2:17 AM.
Just three words:
“I miss you.”

He didn’t expect a reply.
He never did.

But at 6:03 AM, his phone buzzed.
Seen.

That was it. No message.
No call. Just seen.

He smiled.
Not because she read it. But because for one second, she was in the same digital space as him.
Her eyes on the same words his heart had bled onto the screen.

That was enough.

Later that day, he deleted the message.
Not because it hurt.
But because he didn’t want proof.
He didn’t want to look back and say, “See? She saw it.”
He just wanted to believe that somewhere, she felt it too.

Even if it was just for a second.

You don’t owe me anything.
But I owe you this truth:
Loving you has made me a better person.

So thank you.
Even for the pain.

Please trust me when I say this —
I will never leave you.

Even if you give me a hundred reasons to walk away,
I'd still stay.

I won't focus on why to let go.
I'll search for just one reason to hold on.

Because you're not someone I just met.
You're someone I chose — with my silence, with my patience,
with my heart.

You're not an option.
You're my decision.
My person.
My peace.

And I want to stay with you —
no matter what.
No matter how.
Even if you never say it back.

I don’t want to be a burden.
But I don’t want to disappear.

So I’ll stay here—in the middle.
Where love is quiet.
Where hope is thin.
Where you can’t see me,
but I’m still here.

You were never mine.
Still, I was scared to lose you.

You were never mine.
Still, I held you in my heart — without reason, without reply, without any clue.

You were like the wind.
Sometimes you came close —
I could feel you. Hear you. Believe in you.

Then you'd vanish — gone so far, I'd forget what your presence felt like.

You were like silence.
Not loud.
Not demanding.
But always there.
And because of that,
I never spoke too much.
I never asked for more.
I just stayed — afraid that even a single word might make you disappear.

I feared losing you... even though I never truly had you.
Even though you never saw me.
Even though you never chose me.

But in my heart?
You were real.
And that was enough.

You're not a phase.
You're my forever.
Even if it's one-sided.
Even if it's silent.
Even if it's never returned.
You're my forever.

Today I saw a couple holding hands.
They looked happy.
Normal.

I didn't feel jealous.
I felt... peaceful.

Because one day,
maybe,
just maybe,
that could be us.

Even if it's not now.
Even if it's not soon.

I'll wait.
For you.
Always.

All I want is just you.
Not your promises.
Not your future.
Not your words.

Just you.

Here.
Now.
Real.

Even if it's just for a moment.

I like you...
not in a “I want to kiss you” way.
But in a “I want to hold your hand” way.
To intertwine our fingers.
To sit in silence, talking about nothing, and make it mean everything.

I like you in a “let’s stay up all night” way.
Not doing anything special.
Just talking.
Laughing.
Sharing thoughts.
Letting the feeling linger.

I like you in a “can I sleep next to you?” way.
Not in a dirty way.
Not for anything more.
Just... to cuddle.
To hug you closely.
To feel your heartbeat near mine.

I like you in a “can I sleep on your chest?” way.
While you hold me in your arms.
And for once, I forget everything that’s ever hurt me.
Every lie.
Every silence.
Every “I don’t have special feelings for you.”

In your arms, I don’t need to be strong.
I don’t need to be brave.
I don’t need to hide.
I can just... be.

And if I could have one moment — just one — it wouldn't be a kiss.
It wouldn't be a promise.
It wouldn't be a relationship.

It would be this:
me in your arms.
You holding me.
The world outside, gone.
And for a little while...
I forget the pain.
Because you're here.
And that's enough.

All I want is just you.
Not your body.
Just your presence.
Your warmth.
Your peace.

They say distance is measured in kilometres.
But I know better.

Distance is the gap between when I say “I love you” and when you pretend you didn’t hear.

It’s the time between me sending a voice note and you reading it three days later with no reply.

It’s the silence after I say,
“You matter,” and you say, “Okay.”

I live in that space.
Between friendship and love.
Between hope and surrender.
Between “you’re everything” and “you’re nothing.”

And I don’t want to leave.
Because even in the in-between,
I’m still close enough to feel your shadow.

I dreamt of you last night.
We were sitting by the sea.
No words. Just silence.

And for the first time, you held my hand.

I woke up crying.

Not because it wasn't real.
But because it felt more real than anything I've ever known.

You say you don’t believe in soulmates.
I don’t care.

You’re mine.
Even if you don’t know it.
Even if you never will.

All I want is just you.

You're not a choice.
You're a feeling.
Like breath.
Like life.
Like something I can't live without, even if I've never had you.

I love you like a ghost loves a house — not because it's warm, but because it remembers.

I haunt your name in my phone.
I linger in your unread messages.
I whisper your name into the dark like a prayer no god will answer.

You don't see me. You don't feel me.
But I'm here.
In every "maybe one day," in every "what if,"
in every breath I take that still hopes for you.

I'm not alive in this love.
But I'm not dead either.
Just... waiting.
For you to turn around and say,
"Oh. You were here all along?"

And if you never do — that's okay.
I was never asking for forever.
Just one moment where you see me.
Really see me.

And in that moment,
I'll be home.

This book isn't about getting you.
It's about telling you—
You mattered.
You matter.
You'll always matter.

And if one day you read this,
and feel even a fraction of what I've felt... then it was worth it.

Because all I want is just you.
And even if I never get you—
I'll never stop wanting you.

Today I saw your photo again.
Not a new one.
An old one.
From when we first talked.

I zoomed in on your eyes.
Tried to see if they still held the same light.
The same warmth.
The same maybe.

I don't know why I do this.
Torture myself with memories you don't even remember.

But I do.
I remember everything.

The way you said "Hi."
The way your voice cracked when you laughed.
The way you said, "I'll talk to you for a few more days."
Like I was a chapter, not a book.

But still...
all I want is just you.

You don’t have to love me.
Just don’t forget me.
That’s all I ask.
That’s all I need.

I am the boy who loves you in the dark.

The one who saves your birthday in his phone but never celebrates it.

The one who flinches when someone says your name in a crowded room.

I am the silence
after your voice.
The shadow behind your light.
The breath
you never noticed.

I don’t want to be seen.
I just want to be true.

And if being unseen is the price of loving you, then I’ll pay it every single day.

You told me,
"You're too emotional."

But what if this is the only way I know how to love?

Not with grand gestures.
Not with loud words.
But with quiet care.
With daily texts.
With remembering your favourite song.
With showing up — even when you don't ask.

Is that so wrong?

I don’t want to be your saviour.
I don’t want to be your hero.

I just want to be the guy
Who knows how you take your tea?
Who remembers your favourite song?
Who notices when you’re sad even when you say you’re fine.

Is that too much to ask?

I'm not asking for love.
I'm asking for truth.

If you can't love me,
just don't pretend you could.
If you don't want me,
just don't keep my number.
If I'm nothing to you, then let me go like I never mattered.

But don't let me stay in the cracks of your life like I'm convenient.
Like I'm safe.
Like I'm the one person you know will always say "yes."

Because I'm not weak.
I'm just in love.
And there's a difference.

Dear Heart,

I know I keep hurting you.
I know I keep letting her in, even when she doesn't knock.

But you don't understand.
She's not just a girl.
She's the reason I believe in something.

So keep beating.
Even when it hurts.
Even when it breaks.

Because one day,
maybe, you'll beat for her and she'll finally hear it.

— Me

You said,
"I don’t do relationships."

But I don’t want a relationship.
I want you.

Not as my girlfriend.
Not as my future.

Just as you.
Here.
Now.
Real.

"You Are Not Weak"
People say I'm too emotional.
Too attached.
Too much.

They say, "Bro, move on.
She doesn't care.
She'll never love you.
You're wasting your time."

But they don't get it.

Love isn't about being strong.
It's about being true.

I don't care if she never says "I love you."
I don't care if we never hold hands.
I don't care if the world never knows our story.

Because I know.
And she knows.
And that's enough.

I'm not weak for loving her.
I'm strong for loving her this much and still not breaking.

All I want is just you.
And I'll love you in silence if I have to.

You told me,
"I'll talk to you for a few more days."

But here I am.
Months later.
Still talking.
Still hoping.
Still loving.

Not because I'm stubborn.
Because you're worth it.

I love almost-you.
The version of you
that exists in my head.
The one who laughs at my jokes.
The one who holds my hand.
The one who says, “I’m here.”

I love her more than the real you.
Because she never leaves.
She never ignores me.
She never says, “Just die.”

But I know the truth.
The real you is better.
Because she’s real.
And even if she breaks me, she’s still the only one who ever made me feel whole.

You said,
"Don’t get your hopes up."

But hope isn’t something I control.
It’s something I am.

Like the air I breathe.
Like the silence after your name pops up on my phone.

I don’t decide to hope.
I just do.
Because you’re real.
And loving you feels like breathing.

You said,
"If you ever feel lonely, message me."

But I don’t want to be your charity.
Your pity call.
Your “I have time” text.

I want to be the one you choose.
Not the one you allow.

You told me,
"I don’t like starting conversations."

So I do.
Every day.
Even when you don’t reply.
Even when you ignore me for days.
Even when you say things that cut.

I start the conversation.
Because if I don’t,
you disappear.

And I can’t handle your silence.
It’s louder than any word you’ve ever said.

I don’t love you in the way that fills your phone with texts.
I don’t love you in the way that demands your time.
I don’t love you in the way that needs a label, a ring, a “mine.”

I love you in the way that watches your story and doesn’t comment.
In the way that saves your voice note and listens to it at 3 AM.
In the way that sees your name and forgets how to breathe.

This is the quiet kind of love.
The kind that doesn’t scream.
The kind that sits in the dark and says,
“I’m here.”
Even when you don’t ask.
Even when you don’t care.
Even when you never will.

You told me,
"Good, then just die."

You said it as a joke.
But it wasn't.

Because for a second,
I felt like I already had.

But I didn't block you.
I didn't leave.

Because love isn't about fairness.
It's about staying when everything tells you to go.

Yesterday was the day after we met.
I should've felt happy.
Relieved.
At peace.

Instead, I feel like I've lost something I never had.

You looked at me like I was a stranger.
Not a friend.
Not a well-wisher.
Just... someone who existed.

And when you said,
"I don't have any special feelings for you,"
it didn't feel like a door closing.
It felt like a window slamming shut in a room I didn't even know I was living in.

But I still wrote you a letter.
I still sent you a gift.
I still care.

Because love isn't always about being chosen.
Sometimes, it's about choosing someone even when they don't choose you back.

You don’t owe me love.
But you owe me this — don’t make me regret caring for you so deeply.

He opened Notes.
Typed:
“Hey. I saw the moon tonight. It reminded me of you. Not because it’s beautiful. But because it’s silent. And real. And always there, even when no one’s looking.”

He stared at it.
Didn’t send it.
Deleted it.
Rewrote it.
Saved it as a draft.

Every night for three months,
he opened the same draft.
Changed one word.
Closed it.

He never sent it.
But he never deleted it either.

Because some loves aren’t meant to be shared.
They’re meant to be lived.
In silence.
In drafts.
In the space between almost and always.

You told me,
"I'll talk to you for a few more days."

And I counted them.
Every single one.

Because when someone gives you a deadline on their presence, you start living in the margins.

I don't want "a few more days."
I want you.
Not as mine.
Not as a promise.
Just... you.

Here.
Now.
Real.

Even if it's temporary.

Do you know what it feels like to be someone's emotional support system but not their emotional choice?

I carry your pain.
I listen to your fears.
I help you with your problems, your loneliness.

But when you're happy?
You don't call me.
When you're in love?
You don't tell me.
When you need comfort?
Only then — only then — do I exist.

And still...
all I want is just you.

You come to me in pieces,
when you're broken,
when you're tired,
when no one else is around.

And I put you back together, again and again, knowing full well you'll never stay.

You don't see me.
And that's okay.

Because I'm not here to be seen.
I'm here to be.
To exist in the same world as you.
To breathe the same air.
To walk the same streets.
To feel the same rain.

You don't know this,
but I've memorised your routine.
When you wake up.
When you eat.
When you listen to sad songs.
When you cry and no one hears.

I know.
Not because you told me.
Because I pay attention.
Because loving you is my religion.
And attention is my prayer.

So no, I'm not okay.
But I'm not broken either.
I'm just... loving you in the only way I know how — quietly.
Completely.
Forever.

Today I saw a couple arguing.
They were shouting.
One walked away.
The other ran after them.

And I stood there, watching, thinking —
At least they care enough to fight.

But me?
I can't even fight for you.
Because there's nothing to fight for.
You've already made it clear:
I'm not yours.
I never will be.

But I still care.
More than I should.
More than you'll ever know.

You don’t need me.
But you use me.
And I let you.
Because even that feels like love.

You don't deserve just a paragraph.
You deserve a thousand books.
A million pages.
A lifetime of words, all written in silence, just to say how amazing you are.

Not because you're perfect.
But because you're real.
Broken, beautiful, angry, sad, strong — and still somehow kind, even when you don't show it.

You deserve stories about the way you say my name.
About the laugh you try to hide.
About how you push everyone away — but let me stay.

You deserve a book about your silence.
Another about your pain.
One just for the way you carry your past like it's part of you — because it is.

You're not just a girl.
You're a universe.
And I've been lost in you since the day I saw you.

So no, a paragraph isn't enough.
If I had a hundred lives,
I'd spend every one writing about you.

I don’t want to save you.
I don’t want to fix you.
I don’t want to be your light.

I just want to sit with you in the dark.
Hold your hand while you cry.
Say nothing while the world screams.

I don’t want to be your hero.
I just want to be the boy who stayed.
When everyone else left.
When even you tried to push me away.

Because love isn’t about saving.
It’s about staying.
And I’m still here.

(To My Future Self)

Hey,

If you're reading this,
I hope you're happy.
I hope you've found peace.
I hope you've stopped waiting.

But if you haven't — if you still think of her,
if you still care,
if you still write poems no one reads —

Then know this:
It wasn't weakness.
It was love.
Pure.
Silent.
Unasked for.
Unreturned.

And that's okay.
Because you loved not for her.
But because that's who you are.

— Me, 22

You said,
"You get hurt too easily."

But what if I don't choose to get hurt?
What if I just... feel deeply?

When you say "hi,"
my heart jumps.
When you ignore me,
it breaks.
When you say "die," it bleeds.

I don't want to be like this.
But I can't help it.
Because you're not just a girl.
You're the only person who's ever made me feel seen — even when you don't see me.

I don’t want your love.
I want your honesty.
If you can’t love me,
just don’t act like you could.

I don’t miss you.
I miss the idea of you.
The version of you
that laughs at my jokes.
That says my name softly.
That stays.

I miss the you that exists in my dreams.
In my letters.
In the silence after I say, “I love you.”

The real you is different.
Colder.
Distant.
Real.

But I still love her.
Because she’s real.
And real love
isn’t about fantasy.
It’s about choosing the truth
even when it breaks you.

You told me,
"I don’t know what I want."

But I do.
I want you.
Not to fix me.
Not to complete me.
Just to be.

With me.
Near me.
Real.

Even if it’s messy.
Even if it’s unclear.
Even if it’s temporary.

All I want is just you.

You told me,
"I'll never enter your life as a relationship."

But you're already in it.
In the way I write.
In the way I wait.
In the way I breathe when your name lights up my screen.

You don't get to decide how much space you take.
Because love isn't a guest.
It's a force.
And you?
You're the storm.

I'm not waiting for you.
I'm just... here.

There's a difference.

Waiting means I expect you.
Hope for you.
Need you.

But I don't.
I just love you.
And loving you doesn't require you to love me back.

So I'm not waiting.
I'm just living.
With you in my heart.
Like a scar.
Like a song.
Like a truth I can't unlearn.

You say no to love,
but you keep my number.
You say no to us,
but you keep calling.
You say no to forever, but you keep letting me stay.

So don't tell me
you don't want me.
Your actions speak louder than your words.

You asked me,
"Why do you waste your feelings on me?"

Because they're not wasted.
They're lived.

Every time I care for you,
every time I write to you,
every time I wait for your reply —
I'm not wasting my feelings.
I'm honouring them.

Because love isn't about return.
It's about truth.
And the truth is —
I love you.
Even if you don't love me back.

Today I saw your name in my phone's recent calls.
We didn't talk.
I just stared at it.

It's strange how a name can feel like a home.
Even when the door is locked.
Even when the lights are off.

I still stand outside.
Because the idea of you is the only peace I've ever known.

You don’t have to love me.
But don’t ask me to stop loving you.
That’s the one thing
I can’t obey.

Today I deleted her number.
Then added it back.
Then blocked her.
Then unblocked her.

I'm not strong.
I'm just in love.
And love makes you weak.
Makes you stupid.
Makes you do things you know you shouldn't.

But I don't care.
Because even weakness
feels like love.
And I'd rather be weak than never love her at all.

I don’t want to be your emotional crutch.
Your late-night call.
Your “I need help” text.

But if that’s all I can be…
I’ll stay.
Because even being used by you feels better than being forgotten.

To the Future Me Who Moves On

Hey,

If you're reading this,
I hope you're free.
I hope you laugh without thinking of her.
I hope you love someone else.
Someone who loves you back.

But if you're not there yet — if you still check her profile,
if you still write poems no one reads,
if you still feel her in the rain — then don't hate yourself.

You're not weak.
You're just human.
And love isn't a switch. It's a wound.
And healing takes time.

So take it. One breath.
One day. One silent "I miss you" at a time.

And when you finally let go, don't forget her.
Just remember:
She taught you how to love.
And that's a gift no one can take away.

— 22-year-old me

"I Am Not Asking for Forever"
I'm not asking for marriage.
I'm not asking for promises.
I'm not asking for a future.

I'm just asking for now.
For today.
For this moment.

Let me be the one you text when you're sad.
Let me be the one you call when you're bored.
Let me be the one who remembers your favourite colour.

I don't need forever.
I just need you —
as long as you'll let me have you.

Because all I want is just you.

This book isn't for fame.
It's not for likes.
It's not even for you to read.

It's for the boy in me who still believes.
Who still waits.
Who still loves.

And if one day, you pick this up and see your name between the lines...
Know this:

I never needed you to love me back.
I just needed you to exist in my world.

And you do.

So wherever you are,
whatever you're doing,
know that someone out there is thinking of you,
not with anger,
not with expectation,
but with pure, quiet love.

Because all I want is just you.

And that will never change.

— Me

My heart still holds the hope... that one day, you'll hug me and say,
"Thank you for waiting."

Not because I expect it.
But because loving you means believing in small miracles.
In silence.
In patience.
In a love that never asked for anything back.

And if that moment never comes...
that's okay.
I'll still keep hoping.
Not for a reply.
But for the peace of knowing
I loved you fully.
Quietly.
Without giving up.

First... writing was never my thing.
I never liked it.
Never thought I could do it.

But then I saw you.

And somehow, you made me pick up a pen.
Turned my silence into words.
Turned my pain into poetry.
Turned my heart into a book.

So... thank you.
Not for loving me.
Not for choosing me.
But for giving me this — the courage to write.
The need to express.
One more reason to feel alive.

You gave me a hobby.
But I think... you gave me a voice.